Well, eventually, after a great deal of stress and “faffing” around, the “beast” is finally in and commissioned.

Big thanks to Paul and Alex here for their superhuman efforts in getting it into the first floor workshop/studio, along with the boys from TJ Wire who loaned us their fork lift truck, as well as Chris from Trotec for the commissioning and training. I'd also like to thank the team at Western Airducts for a very neat installation of the extraction system at short notice.

Here are some pics of what we've done so far; along with a short video of its first job (it's a bit fuzzy because we sensibly kept the acrylic guard down while filming it).

I have to say (I know I'm biased), but the quality of finish is superb!

It's also really interesting (although somewhat stressful initially) learning to use new software.

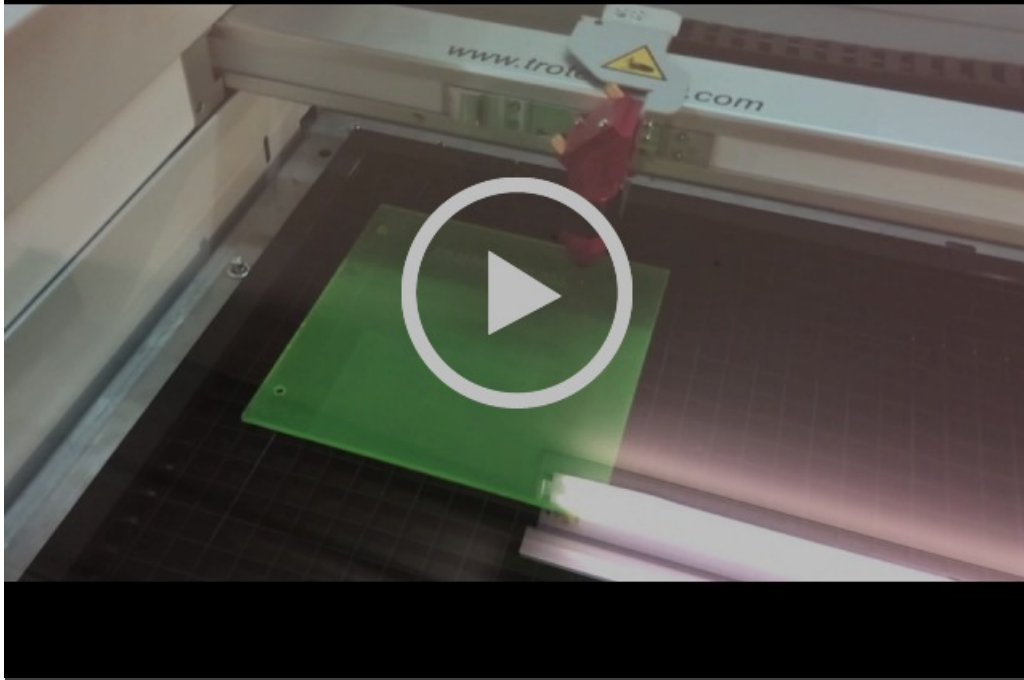

Paul and I are old hands at Alphacam, but Coreldraw X8 and Trotec Jobcontrol have their own idiosyncratic nuances, which when coupled with learning how to use Windows 10 (which is on the new dedicated PC), makes for interesting “chin scratching” moments.

Anyway, I'm off for another “play” – at the moment, anything that can be engraved and/or cut is being used!! Going to try a photo using greyscale next.

All the best
